This proposition met with general favor among the subscribers, and the prospect seems to be that it will be accepted. The only obstacle in the way is the possible refusal of the three gentlemen who are to run the mill, to enlorse the proposed location. Should they so refuse, then the proposition fails, and has no binding force, and the deficit renains to be made up in some other way. The location seems to be a favorable one and the opinion, so tar as we have been able to gather it, is that the subscription will be closed, and the location of the rolling mill will become a fixed fact in this place on the basis of this proposition. This drama was written by the Rev. H. H Milman a man of high rank as historian and poet. It is a play that was successfully performed by Miss Kemble in Europe and the U. States. The peerless Ristori has also used her tragic powers in the impersonation of its leading character, and here we cannot withhold the testimony of able critics who have heard both in this part, that Mrs. Brooke rivals, if not surpasses the tamed Ristori.
